Strange, that I get a message that my account is restricted for 24 hours, while all is still normal.

In the answer by LinkedIn is written that there is a high number of invitation levels. I do not invite people, I am sometimes invited, but I hardly accept invitations. Reason: when I do not know the person, or the profile is not fitting with my interests, I do not accept the invite.

Again: there have hardly been invitations, so I wonder how LinkedIn can take that as a problem, to even deactivate my account. And to threaten me with a permanent closing?

Hi Antoinette,

Thanks for contacting us.

Since we detected abnormally high levels of invitation activity on your account, it has been suspended for 24 hours. At the end of the temporary suspension, your account will be automatically unrestricted. However, if we continue detecting unusually high invitation volumes on your account, it may be indefinitely restricted.

To protect our members' information, the User Agreement and Professional Community Policies state that we don't permit the use of tools that automate activity on LinkedIn. This includes using automation tools to send invitations. Unusually high sent invitation volumes may be generated by third-party applications or browser extensions that interact with LinkedIn. If you use any such software, we recommend disabling it.

Additionally, this can also be a result of sending a high volume of invitations manually.

Please let me know if you have any other questions. I'm always happy to help.

Regards,

Niki

Your Question: I would like to offer important information about the way I am bullied on LinkedIn, that is not recognized by LinkedIn, neither has LinkedIn recognized an expression, a Dutch expression, that has been categorized as bullying, while I, me, am bullied.

Because I can get restrictions I feel the urge to defend myself against wrong practices. I want to declare myself, the way I reacted, and that the way I reacted was not bullying at all. While the one who reported this was bullying me with a word that LinkedIn does not recognize as bullying. My comment has been deleted in the meantime, by myself, to avoid to be restricted. Now I see it as necessary to inform LinkedIn about that where they fail: when someone reports a comment, then please go to the comment where the person comments. The word scientist is not a bad term, but it was used against me to humiliate me, to bully me. To say: you are stupid. I reacted correctly, I explained what was necessary, and added the words: you were not so clever. Je was een beetje dom.

Queen Maxima used exact the same words within a similar context in public, in front of TV cameras, about Willem Alexander, her fiancee then, now king. The one who got my reaction is Dutch and knows that my words were an utterly mild criticism. While he bullied me naming me a scientist. To humiliate me.
